Contents : The Departmental Archives of Seine-et-Marne hold 90% of the minute books of notaries in the depart ment. Some minute books are incomplete, due to destruction during different periods. Indexes and tables were limited before the nineteenth century. A few samples of customer records were kept.

The deeds held in the notarial archive collections are highly varied: buying and selling, sharing, marriage contrac ts, wills, leases, transactions, rents, guardianship accounts, probate inventories. Some documents are specific t o the Ancien Regime: declarations to terriers, records of surveying or boundary marking, certificates of learning.

All these are an invaluable, rich, key source for both genealogy and for economic and social history. The reading of a will or probate inventory can provide information on the religious beliefs of an individual, his or her wealth, lifestyle and even the contents of his or her library. A marriage contract, meanwhile, can provide certain informa tion on the social status of families, based on the dowry or a list of the various witnesses, for example. Howeve r, analysis of the minutes of a notarial office study allows for both quantitative surveys and long-term statistics.

The inventories below are ordered by notarial office.
